

THURSTWELL'S CORRESPONDENCE

My dear Thurstwell,

It's done. I've sent word to Vaaz. We'll be rid of the oaf soon enough.

I could use more of your divinations, though. My research using Elturgard's armorial rolls suggest that the Majerus family were quite bountiful with their loins both during and after their service to the Companion. Given how many brats they seem to have had, they were probably rutting in their saddles. It's likely they have any number of heirs in the refugee camps, so I think it'll be well worth your time to cast forth your seventh eye or whatever and identify them for me.

—Amrik